Signs of the season are all around us. Not only do we find pumpkins and bundles of corn stalks gracing the doorways of residences and businesses, but also quite a few spooky things in anticipation of Halloween. The one that caught my eye last week was a stretcher in front of a local pizza restaurant. At first I thought there was a real body on it, but taking a second glance I realized it was a life-size ‘cadaver’ with a grim and terrifying face. I was spooked!

Much of what is done on October 31 is innocent enough. Dressing up, collecting candy and feigning fright makes for a good evening for the young and young at heart, and I am thankful for our town’s ‘safe zone’.

Yet not to be missed is what comes the day after. Nov. 1 is All Saints’. On this day, the focus shifts from darkness and death to light and life. In particular, the spotlight is directed onto those washed and cleansed from the muck of this world and whose lives have been made beautiful by the Spirit of the living God dwelling in them.

Addressing those who have experienced this wonderful transformation, the apostle Peter says: “But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should shew forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light.”

The New Testament refers to those who have been “called out of darkness” as “saints”. Later in Christian history, this designation will get narrowed down to a special class of the especially holy, but not in the Bible. All who have been united to Christ in faith and baptism are “called to be saints” (1 Corinthians 1:2).

Some of these ‘saints’ may have a long way to go before reaching anything like spiritual perfection. Saints, nevertheless, they are.

Indeed, this is the situation we find Paul addressing in his first letter to the Corinthians. He begins by calling those who had given their allegiance to Jesus Christ saints, but then proceeds to chastise them for some very un-saint-like behavior. How can this be?

The Greek word from which we get 'saint' is 'hagios'. It means 'set apart'. Again, all those who have been united to Jesus Christ have been set apart for His service, but they are still works in progress. C.S. Lewis speaks of wearing the mask first and then allowing our face to grow into that mask. A pretty good illustration, I think.

This process of transformation requires grace on God's part. It does not come about through our own unaided efforts or by following some prescribed program of self-improvement. Nevertheless, there IS work for us to do.

The road to sainthood requires discipline. Just as a good soldier must give single-minded attention to the rigors of army life, so must the soldier of the cross. A wise man once said: "Without discipline faith remains pallid and unproductive." But how might we go about getting and applying this discipline? Let me offer five suggestions:

1. Be disciplined in prayer. Without prayer there is no vital experience of God. Without prayer we cannot hear God's voice.

2. Be disciplined in devotion to scripture. The Bible is more than a collection of 'stories', it is the great story, the story of where we came from, what went wrong with the human race, what God has done to put things right and what God requires of us. The story comes alive as we find our place in it.

3. Be disciplined in study. Without study we remain preschoolers in the faith. Study in itself will not save the soul, but without study our roots wither and die.

4. Be disciplined in obedience to the Holy Spirit. Only obedience enables us to grow and develop as saints.

5. Be disciplined in reflecting on the lives of great Christians in the past. Let their fidelity to the Faith in spite of hardships and persecutions encourage you as you make your way toward the finish line.

Halloween is just around the corner. If it is your custom, celebrate the innocent bits of fun on this night, but don't remain in the darkness represented by skulls and black hats. Turn the calendar. Open the curtains. Aim at being a saint, a child of the light!

Almighty God, who hast knit together thine elect in one communion and fellowship, in the mystical body of thy Son Christ our Lord; Grant us grace so to follow thy blessed Saints in all virtuous and godly living, that we may come to those unspeakable joys which thou hast prepared for those who unfeignedly love thee; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen. (Collect for All Saints', The Book of Common Prayer)
