

Eileen began assisting with St. Luke's music around 1990 and continued until her illness and death at the end of 2022. She came with a man she was dating who was an Episcopalian (that's another story) and ended up staying after they broke up. He was not terribly happy about the situation and told her, "Go, find your own damn church!" She didn't. Katie Shane, a retired dance professor at Georgia State in Atlanta and a long-time friend of Eileen funded the plaque, The two along with another young woman shared a house before they each got married or moved away. Katie's husband was a lawyer. She was one of the few people that knew how to handle Eileen's emotional ups and downs.
